Overview of the course

The course will take the form of a fieldtrip, visiting sites of mineralisation associated with and near the Dartmoor granite. Alan Hart leads the mineralogy collections team at the Natural History Museum. Mike Rumsey is a member of that team. Both have experience of mineralogical fieldwork and surveying in Devon and elsewhere in the UK.

About the centre

Victoria House is a substantial, detached red-brick property boasting lovely views over the town to the coast from many of the rooms. The spacious accommodation includes a large games room with pool table, table tennis plus a small gym and sauna suite. The house has a large terraced patio area with seating and is only 10 minutes walk to the beach and town amenities.

Originally the Victorian train station hotel, this luxurious accommodation would be an ideal base for anyone wishing to bring their partner to have a short break too. The additional price per night would be £40 to include dinner, bed & breakfast. This seaside town boasts a cinema, theatre, museum, coastal and country walks in addition to the local shops.

Accommodation: Victoria House offers 8 luxury rooms with en-suite (some double and some twin) there are a further two bedrooms with shared bathroom.

About Lyme Regis

The picturesque coastal town of Lyme Regis is set in the centre of Dorset and Devon's Jurassic Coast, England's only natural World Heritage Site, including the Axmouth to Lyme Regis Undercliffs National Nature Reserve, one of the most important wilderness areas in Britain. The Town and neighbouring Charmouth are famous for their geology, coastal erosion and direct access to fossils on the beach including ammonites, marine reptiles and dinosaurs that inhabited the early Jurassic Seas. In the nineteenth century Lyme Regis was home to the renowned fossil hunter and expert Mary Anning and played a pivotal role in the birth of the earth sciences.

Lyme Regis is a great place from which to study the natural sciences offering easy access to the South West and the giant outdoor classroom that is the 95 miles Jurassic Coast. Lyme Regis also has a rich cultural heritage and today offers an eclectic mix of arts and other activities that run throughout the year.
